NOTES

Argentine Terrorists Feel the Crunch

For over a year Argentine security forces successfully used stomach pumps in saving terrorists who attempted to avoid capture by swallowing plastic capsules containing cyanide. A special emergency medical unit, complete with ambulance, was created by security authorities just to deal with this problem. (See the issue of 25 May.) Recently, however, several subversives faced with arrest have taken cyanide capsules made of glass. When these capsules are chewed there is sufficient cutting within the mouth for cyanide to enter the blood stream. Death is assured.

Chrysler Executive's Bodyguards Attacked

According to a Reuter report, the bodyguards of a Chrysler Corporation executive were the victims of an armed attack in a suburb of Buenos Aires. The car used by the guards was sprayed with machine-gun fire from two other cars. Two of the bodyguards were killed and a third seriously wounded. The attackers have not been identified.

NOTES

French Executive Slain In Argentina

Terrorists shot and killed Andre Gasparoux, the technical director of the Argentine subsidiary of the French Peugeot Motor Company, and seriously wounded his police bodyguard on 16 December. Seven terrorists, including two women, staged the attack. The 55-year-old French businessman was ambushed two blocks from his home as he was driving to work in the Buenos Aires suburb of Ranelagh. His assailants used a truck to block his car and then sprayed it with machine-gun fire before making their escape. [redacted] 3.5(c)
